THAT WAS A PRETTY GOOD MASS.

A A

I'D SAY SO!

IT'S AMAZING, INNIT? TO BE RISEN AGAIN IN THREE DAYS?

YEAH...

IT REMINDS ME OF FINALS WEEK, FALL OF '09. I HAD THREE ALL-NIGHTERS IN A ROW, THEN ONCE MY TESTS WERE OVER ON FRIDAY, I KNOCKED OUT AND DIDN'T WAKE UP UNTIL THAT FOLLOWING SUNDAY.

OKAY, SERIOUSLY, YOU PASSING OUT FOR THREE DAYS DOES NOT EQUATE TO RESURRECTING FROM THE DEAD.

...SURE FELT LIKE I WAS DEAD, THOUGH.

BASEBALL

Cats win three-game home series against Sacred Heart

Mike Kindel, senior outfielder, slides into base as a Sacred Heart player attempts to tag him out on Saturday at Tointon Family Stadium. The Wildcats won the game, 7-0.

Spencer Low
staff writer

The Wildcats swept Sacred Heart University at home over the week-end, their first three-game sweep this season.

On Thursday, the first inning saw 11 runners cross home between both teams, as Sacred Heart plated four and the Wildcats responded with seven runs of their own. Included in those seven were four more runs which came home on senior catcher Dan Klein's first career grand slam, his second homer of the year.

Senior starting pitcher Matt Applegate threw 5.1 innings, giving up the four runs in the first inning but settling down for the next few innings. He allowed seven hits, striking out five and walking four. Freshman pitcher Robert Youngdahl earned his first career win by getting the last two outs of the seventh after sophomore pitcher Gerardo Esquivel, who relieved Applegate, allowed two runs in the beginning of the inning.

On Friday night, junior starting pitcher Joe Flattery and freshman pitcher Matt Wivinis held Sacred Heart to just one run and combined for 13 strikeouts as the Wildcats took a 6-1 victory in game two.

Flattery pitched 5.1 innings for the Wildcats, allowing one run off four hits, striking out six and walking three. The junior starter earned his fourth win on the year to bring his record to 4-2. He was relieved by Wivinis, who threw 3.2 scoreless innings to finish out the game, allowing only three hits and striking out a career high seven batters, walking none and earning his first career save.

"Wivinis was outstanding," said head coach Brad Hill after the game. "He attacked and got after it ... he made really good pitches."

K-State's first shutout of the season came on Saturday afternoon, as Wildcat pitchers combined to strike out 10 and allowed only three hits.

"We got great pitching today," said Hill after the game. "That was the key."

Senior starting pitcher Kayvon Bahramzadeh earned his fourth win on the season to put his record at 4-1, pitching six scoreless innings, striking out seven and walking two with three hits. He was followed by one inning from Youngdahl, and two more by junior pitcher Jake Doller. Neither reliever allowed a baserunner and they combined for three strikeouts.

The scoring was started in the third inning by sophomore infielder Ross Kivett, who led off with a single, stole second, advanced to third on junior infielder Tanner Witt's groundout and scored on sophomore center fielder Jared King's single to center.

K-State's first five batters of the fifth inning all reached base and the Wildcats scored four in the frame. Senior infielder Jake Brown led off by getting plunked by a pitch, and advanced to third on a bloop by Kivett, who stole second to put two runners in scoring position. Witt responded by hitting his team-leading third triple of the season to score two runs for K-State. A grounder to third by King scored Witt and an error by Sacred Heart saw the center fielder safe at first.

A walk to senior infielder Wade Hinkle saw a pitching change, and senior infielder Matt Giller laid down a sacrifice bunt to third to advance both runners to scoring position. Jon Davis was hit by a pitch to load the bases for sophomore catcher Blair DeBord, who drew a walk to score King and give K-State a 5-0 lead.

DeBord delivered again in the seventh, when King and Hinkle found themselves in scoring position again after a sacrifice bunt, and the designated hitter single gave the Wildcats two more runs and a 7-0 lead.

King finished the day 4-5 with a double and two RBIs, while DeBord had three RBIs of his own, going 1-1 with a walk.

The team travels to take on Missouri State in Springfield, Mo. at 6 p.m. Wednesday and then will return to face No. 21 Baylor in Manhattan April 13-15.

Phase two of stadium expansion to begin

Jared Brown
staff writer

One week after introducing Bruce Weber as the new men's head basketball coach, Athletics Director John Currie refocused his attention to the $75 million West Stadium Center expansion set to take place at Bill Snyder Family Stadium by announcing that a groundbreaking ceremony will take place April 28, prior to the Spring Game.

"When we proposed phase two of West Stadium Center at the bowl pep rally at Rangers Stadium, the reaction and endorsement from our fans was tremendous," said Currie at a media luncheon Friday afternoon. "Today I'm very pleased to announce, the enthusiasm has translated into dramatic fundraising momentum which will enable us to formally break ground on April 28, 2012, the morning of the spring football game, with intent to be complete with phase two for the 2013 football season."

Fundraising has been successful, as over $40 million in funding has been secured towards the $75 million estimated full project cost.

K-State president Kirk Schulz, Currie, head football coach Bill Snyder and other special guests will be in attendance for the ceremonial shovel turning that will take place at approximately 11:30 a.m. on the west side of the stadium.

"This facility will be well over 250,000 square feet and will have something for every K-State fan and every student athlete," Currie said. "Our goal

head football coach of the best fan experience in the Big 12 will be enhanced with twice as many restroom fixtures and concessions points of sale in the west concourse, along with a Hall of Honor recognizing the heritage of our university and athletics program with equally vital improvements in safety and security and ADA access."

Phase two of a six phase master plan for Bill Snyder Family Stadium, will provide a northwest gateway to the K-State campus. Phase one of the master plan was completed prior to the 2011 season with the addition of new restrooms to the eastside upper deck and a new AstroTurf playing surface on Wagner Field.

"This new gateway to Kansas State University sends a message to what a remarkable university we have," said Snyder. "We have a tremendous environment for our student athletes and all our students, and this truly shows how it all ties together with this amazing community that we have. We are all one family, which permeates the entire university, our fan base and our wonderful student body and faculty."

The original facilities in the stadium were built in 1969 and the Dev Nelson Press Box opened in 1993. Besides what Currie mentioned, fans can also expect additions to include a new student athlete dining hall, new club and loge seats, a new ticket office and K-State retail locations.

The stadium upgrades allow student athletes a world-class experience, but the experience isn't all Currie is concerned about.

"Not insignificantly, winning is important," Currie said. "The West Stadium Center and the Bill Snyder Family Stadium master plan will help secure our competitive future. A future we are absolutely committed to include championship performances at the highest level of intercollegiate athletics."

TRACK AND FIELD

K-State successful in split squad meets

Adam Suderman
staff writer

The Wildcats participated in their second of three straight weekends of split squad meets. Part of the team competed in Tempe, Ariz. at the Sun Angel Classic while most of the team was in Emporia, Kan. for the ESU Relays.

Field events, in particular the throwing events, continue to be a strong point during this outdoor season.

Sophomore Ryan Hershberger highlighted the weekend at Emporia finishing first in the men's discus with a throw of 164-2 and also second in the men's shot put, throwing 55-7.5.

Senior Tomaz Bogovic and junior Jacquelyne Leffler each contributed to the solid performance by the group. Bogovic finished second in the men's hammer throw with a toss of 196-2 while Leffler won the women's discus with a throw of 146-8 and also finished second in the women's hammer throw with a toss of 178-6.

Senior Cory Boulanger took second place in the javelin with a throw of 206-9.

In Tempe, sophomore Kyle Wait continues to show great progress in the pole vault finishing third with a vault of 17-1.

Leading an impressive weekend for the Wildcats at the Sun Angel Classic was a first place finish from freshman Sarah Kolmer in the women's 400-meter dash. Kolmer came in first by just .15 seconds to claim the title with a 54.94 performance.

The short sprint events continue to show that they have great promise as well with several strong performances.

The women's 4x100 relay team composed of juniors Samantha McKnight and Richelle Farley, senior TiAra Walpool and sophomore Erica Twiss finished second with a time of 45.91.

ROWING

Wildcats defeat Jayhawks, win Kansas Cup

Sean Frye
staff writer

The K-State women's rowing team brought their brooms to Wyandotte County Lake, as they swept all five races against Kansas in the annual Kansas Cup, marking the second consecutive year the Wildcats have defeated the Jayhawks for the title.

The five-race sweep gave the Wildcats a 20-0 win over the Jayhawks. The Novice 4 boat posted a time of 8:05.6, nearly six seconds better than Kansas. The Novice 8 ousted the Jayhawks just by a half second with their time of 7:08.8.

The Varsity 4 boat beat the Jayhawks by five seconds with a time of 7:55.7. The 2nd Varsity 8 squeaked by Kansas 7:12.4 to 7:15.8. However, the 1st Varsity 8 boat, in the premiere race worth eight posts, the most of any race on the day, handled their business, beating the Jayhawks by 11 seconds with a time of 7:13.4.

K-State rowing head coach Patrick Sweeney was pleased with his team's overall effort on the day.

"It was a complete team win and really satisfying to see the team do well," Sweeney said. "Three of the events they were pretty close so it could have easily gone the other way."

Sweeney also was pleased with the fact that the eight seniors on the team, Nicole Burdick, Weatherly Butler, Sierra Cuda, Ali Peters, Traci Smiley, Amanda Weishaar, Hanna Wiltfong and Anna Young, grabbed their second straight title against rival Kansas. This group of seniors has only lost the Kansas Cup one time in their tenure with the Wildcats.

"For the seniors, it's always nice for them to beat KU one and one," Sweeney said. "What they have done this year is that they're helping build the whole team. Today, it was a really good team effort and everybody went for it."

While the win means a lot to the team, the coaches and rowers are hoping this win is a positive sign as they head forward into the Southern Intercollegiate Rowing Association (SIRA) regatta in Oak Ridge, Tenn., then the Big 12 Conference and Conference USA championships.

"We've still got more speed we can find, we haven't tapped out yet," Sweeney said. "I think we can find a few more seconds out there. You're not going to knock off 20 seconds or anything like that, but there is a few things we can do to improve on."

Some adjustments the Wildcats may make heading into those regattas will be seating changes in the varsity boats.

"What we're trying to do is we're trying to improve the varsity boats. There may be some changes in seating," Sweeney said.

However, Sweeney also emphasized that the other squads that they are preparing to face are going through the same process of tinkering with their lineups.

"Obviously KU will make some changes after what we did to them," Sweeney said.

The Wildcats have two weeks to prepare for the SIRA regatta, which starts on April 21. Sweeney is hoping the momentum from a sweep of Kansas will carry over to the upcoming competitions.

"We're just focusing on what we're doing," Sweeney said. "We've done this before. It's nice to put back-to-back ones together because it shows consistency."

Google’s ‘Project Glass’ illustrates technology dependency

Brian Hampel

Last Wednesday, Google showed the world one of its latest works-in-progress, Project Glass.

Computers that can be worn everywhere and give us constant access to the Internet sound truly wonderful, but I wonder about the implications for us, not as consumers, but as human beings. Having that kind of convenience and connectivity 24/7 could well backfire on us. Rather than making us resemble the good-looking hipsters in the promo shots, Project Glass could make us resemble the invalids in “Wall-E.”

Before I start, I should say that technology is wonderful, my laptop is my favorite toy and I think the Internet is one of our species’ greatest accomplishments. The information age has given us access to all kinds of marvels that our world is better for having. From email to search engines to databases and even to social networking, our lives are improved for having all of this access.

My worry about Project Glass (and the successors that will surely follow it) is that it signals an addiction to the access technology gives us. Ten years ago, we were learning to appreciate the connectivity of the Internet, but now, we might be craving it.

More and more, we are finding ways to reduce the amount of time we spend without the Internet in our lives. In addition to the ever-improving speed of home Internet services, the advent of smartphones and netbooks is helping us stay connected everywhere we go. A significant portion of the K-State population already has the ability to access the Internet 24 hours a day.

That kind of connectivity could be a modern marvel, but I think we’re becoming dependent on it. Visiting Facebook, for example, is easier than having a face-to-face conversation with someone, and we can do it at our own convenience any time we want. We have a fast, easy, accessible way to connect (in some sense) to our friends, and a product like Google’s new glasses could make it almost completely effortless. Already, a lot of people go to Facebook by default when they have nothing to do. Once Google’s glasses make it possible to visit the Internet every time we have nothing to do, we may completely forget how to be alone.

Being alone (not to be confused with being lonely) is an important skill to develop. For practical reasons if nothing else, we simply can’t be connected to others and receiving their stimulation and feedback all day long. Before we had ubiquitous Internet connections, we had to learn to be comfortable in our own skins.

Humankind’s favorite pastime has always been interacting with each other, but we found ways to keep ourselves occupied when other humans weren’t immediately available. Be it a hobby or a book or just something interesting to think about while we walk down the street, we’ve always found ways to stimulate our minds when we didn’t have friends around to help.

If Project Glass takes that alone time and fills it with more stimulation from our friends, what’s the use of learning how to be alone? When will we practice keeping ourselves occupied if the Internet can do it for us literally whenever we want?

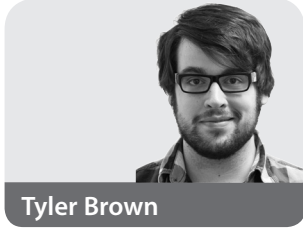

Project Glass is a really, really cool idea, but we should see it as an opportunity to ask ourselves if we really need it. Are our lives going to be improved by more connection with the Internet? We may think we’re happier at first, but when we start panicking at the thought of not having Internet access for some period of time, we might notice that the beginning of the 21st century saw us grow so used to our technology that nothing else seemed entertaining any more.

‘Entitled’ fans should contribute, not complain

Tyler Brown

The past month for me has been fraught with passionate anger. This ire hasn’t been from me, but rather from my friends who are fans of the most intense kind. However, this anger isn’t always warranted, in my opinion.

One friend, after seeing the X-Box Kinect “Star Wars” game designed for kids and a dancing game - one that features the legendary Han Solo - posted the trailer for the game on Facebook with the comment, “Star Wars, you are dead to me.” My immediate response was a comment on his post saying, “Why are you letting products now affect your perception of the films?” His response quickly delved into how the franchise has become something it wasn’t originally, how the prequels ruined the entire series and how the franchise “now exists almost completely to trash itself.”

Being a huge fan of “Star Wars” and growing up watching it, I could understand such a jaded view of the franchise; however, what I cannot understand is letting what a franchise has become change your views of a supposedly-loved trilogy. Sure, George Lucas has tinkered with the originals, adding unnecessary CGI characters in, but that hasn’t lessened the story of the first three films.

Don’t get me wrong, I realize the prequels have an entire laundry list of issues, but as this is a franchise, they have to balance bringing in new, younger fans while hoping to please the existing ones.

Another, recent outcry from fans has been over the ending of “Mass Effect 3,” the final installment of a game series that many have come to love over the years for one reason - your choices from the games carry over to the sequels and affect the story, making it more personal. However, when the final game in the series came out, a ton of fans cried out against the ending saying it ruined the game and even the entire series. Personally, on my first time through, I had no problem with the ending, but do take note that it isn’t perfect.

Fans even went so far as to start donations on sites like ChipIn where over $80,000 was raised on one campaign to bring awareness to the game publisher, EA and then donate the money to a charity. Since then, EA has announced that there will be a downloadable expansion that will add onto the “Mass Effect 3” story this summer.

The adjective ‘entitled’ has been used to describe these passionate fans and that may not be wholly wrong.

If you don’t like the “Star Wars” prequels like myself and many other fans, fine. Choose not to watch them on your own time and don’t go see the re-released 3-D renditions in theaters. If you choose to spend your own $60 on a game, don’t be upset at the creators, be upset that you spent that amount on the game. Above all else, if you want certain things out of stories, games, etc., go out and make them yourself; create the entertainment you’d like to see instead of complaining about what others have done with their time and effort.

I’m not saying that fans don’t have a right to be upset, but where does it end? By choosing to continually put money toward following a certain storyline in any medium, it’s a way of voting, a way of telling whoever is in charge of the distribution of that product that you, the consumer would like more.

TO THE POINT

Student research jobs valuable experience

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian’s official opinion.

A student’s time at any university is valuable. Most of that time is spent on studying, testing and, of course, working. While college jobs are typically thought of as attempts to gain money and stay afloat on college loans, they should be considered as much more than that. Students should recognize the importance of finding stimulating research jobs on campus, so they can use the time they spend working to contribute to their classroom learning.

Student research jobs are available in all departments, and though they may be difficult to find, they will serve students much better than jobs that are only meant to earn a wage. There is a certain value in working at a job that applies classroom material, and such a job offers several benefits to students willing to seek them out. Like internships, student research jobs engage students and allow them to get a feel for what their future career may entail. The practical application of knowledge can also, in turn, aid a student within the classroom.

The Career and Employment Services website proves to be a helpful tool in the often difficult search to find a student research job. Even when an opportunity is found, students should not be discouraged if the job begins with no salary. Today’s economy can and often does put students in a precarious position if they have no income, but several non-paying jobs will turn into jobs with an earning wage if the employee continues to stay with the job and move up in importance.

K-State can also support this student endeavor by increasing student research job opportunities. This increase would require more funding, which is not always possible. However, a plausible alternative to spending more money is to offer more student research opportunities as course credit. This would allow a wider variety of students to experience job opportunities that can apply to their future careers.

INTERNATIONAL | Talent show, events continue all week

people who work in fields. There were also two traditional instruments and four traditional fans from northeast China. Two of the fans were red and made of cloth that would traditionally be used in dance and performance and the other two were decorated and designed for everyday use.

"We just brought different things from our culture," said Qianqi Sun, president of CSSU and junior in business management. "There is stuff here from all over China. Like from the southwest, the northeast, the south and different things that are a part of our lives."

This is the tenth year ICC has sponsored their International Week, with the help of the Union Program Council and the Student Governing Association. Obair Siddiqui, president of ICC and graduate student in industrial engineering, said the game day is the icebreaker event for the rest of the week.

"We like having people come to game day and make a connection to the week," Siddiqui said. "We would love for people to attend the rest of the events, and to go on and tell their friends and roommates about how much fun they had here."

Siddiqui said this year will be a benchmark year for ICC because this year's International Week will set the precedent for future years. He said he wants ICC to be more active for international students, who are often underrepresented.

"Overall, I thought this went really great," said Benita Mugabo, secretary of ICC and sophomore in management and information services. "It went much better than expected. There were more people and more games than we thought there was going to be."

The game day and parade were just the opening day for ICC's International Week. Later in week, they will host many other major events including a talent show, a cultural exhibition and fashion show and a panel discussion about education and world peace.

"This was the opening ceremony and the talent show will be the closing ceremony for International Week," said Sarinya Sungkatavat, former president of ICC and graduate student in hospitality management and human ecology. "It will be the biggest it has ever been. There will be people from every region around the world, including performances of instruments, dancing, singing and drama."

International Week will continue throughout this week and into next weekend. Sungkatavat encouraged all students to participate in the week's events, saying that people don't necessarily need to travel to different countries to experience cultural exchange.

"People can travel around the world without having to spend any money and without having to leave K-State," said Sungkatavat. "International is for everyone, including American students."

RCPD uncovers underage sex trafficking

The Riley County Police Department received a call from Sedgwick County officials requesting assistance to locate a 15-year-old female runaway last Thursday. Authorities believed that the runaway girl was involved in prostitution at a local hotel.

Detectives found the girl at America's Best Value Inn, and after further investigation, located the people that transported the girl. Officers were granted a search warrant to search their hotel room and concluded that the runaway 15-year-old was brought to Manhattan for the purpose of prostitution.

Zachary T. Bevilacqua, of Winfield, Kan. was arrested for aggravated trafficking, aggravated endangering of a child and possession of marijuana.

Kendra L. Gonzalez, of Wichita, was arrested for aggravated trafficking, aggravated endangering of a child, promoting prostitution, possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia.

The runaway female, whose name was withheld because she is a victim of a sex crime, was initially arrested for prostitution, possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia.

After consulting the Riley County Attorney's Office, however, officials released the 15-year-old minor and did not charge her with any of the offenses previously listed, categorizing her as a victim of aggravated trafficking and prostitution.

Bevilacqua is currently confined in the Riley County jail, on a $24,000 bond. Gonzalez was transported to the North Central Kansas Juvenile Detention Facility in Junction City

Flint Hills Discovery Center to open

The Flint Hills Discovery Center will open for the first time to the general public next Saturday and will hold a ceremony to commemorate the grand opening of the $24.5 million facility.

The 35,000 square foot building was built to house exhibits that focus on historic topics regarding the origin of the Flint Hills. Exhibits include information on cowboys and ranching, railroad communities, prairie burning, multiple prairie ecosystems and the cultural history of Native American tribes who lived on the Great Plains.

The center also includes a "family fun zone," that features interactive stations, arts and crafts and a toddler area, as well as a theater in which visitors can view a 15 minute film about the Flint Hills.

Visitors can enjoy the view from the outdoor terrace on the third floor and utilize the various classrooms and offices.

The new facility is located on 315 S. 3rd Street, just south of Manhattan Town Center.

Customers can call 785-587-6345 to arrange transit services that will run from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Admission at the opening event is free to the public.

years of performing experience, and spent much of his childhood traveling all over the world.

Around one third of the chapel was full before the concert started on Friday. The majority of spectators were Indians, many of whom were wearing traditional dress.

There were also many locals in attendance, however, including Bob Smith, retired professor of civil engineering, who came to the concert with his wife, Mary.

"We wanted to bring a little flavor. We brought these musicians that belong to the southern part."

"We read about it in the Collegian," Smith said. "We decided we come over and listen to it."

There were three main songs, each 30 minutes long. According to Subramanyam, an important characteristic of classical south Indian music is improvisation.

Another important feature of Indian music is that it should resemble the human voice, Subramanyam said. According to him, the closer a musician can reproduce the sound of a person's voice, the more skilled the musician is considered to be.

"All the compositions were for the voice," he said. "More or less we present compositions from the oral tradition."

The musicians came to K-State after receiving an invitation by the Society for Appreciation of Bharatiya Heritage and Arts. The organization raised around $3,000 to bring these artists to Manhattan.

Vijaya Iyer, SABHA president and graduate student in microbiology, said the group already hosted performers from northern India. Although there are a lot of similarities in the music of both parts of the country, the Indian community was also waiting to hear southern musicians, she said.

"We wanted to bring a little flavor," Iyer said. "We brought these musicians that belong to the southern part."

Friday's performance was not Subramanyam's first visit to K-State. He said he visited Manhattan around 20 years ago when he performed here with different musicians.

"It was the same music but different compositions and improvisations," he said.

Iyer also said she was very happy to see good support from the audience.

Mukta Pahwa, research assistant in entomology, came to the concert as an ordinary spectator. Although Puhwa said she is familiar with southern Indian music, she said this performance was no ordinary performance.

"They [the musicians] are very bright people," Pahwa said. Smith also appreciated the concert, even though it was his first time he had ever listened to Indian music.

"I thought it was a remarkable performance," he said.

only worth five points. However, the kick is worth two points and has to be placed on the line from where the try was scored.

During Saturday's game, Kansas scored within the first two minutes and never looked back. The Jayhawks led the game at halftime 19-5 with K-State's only try coming from an eight-man sneak, off a scrum win. The second half was even worse for the Wildcats with Kansas using impressive back plays, like switches, to open things up.

Allen described how proud he was of the players, despite the 53-5 loss.

"We have 12 rookies, eight of which was their first game," he said. "The progress is on pace exactly where we need to be. I am very proud of these girls."

According to Allen, the KU players had much more experience, but the young Wildcat team is going to be great next year.

Stephanie Skinner, captain of the K-State team and senior in animal sciences and industry, described the game as a fun, one-time thing. Despite the loss, she remains optimistic.

"It wasn't our best game, but we are getting better," Skinner said. "Everyone comes in knowing nothing, and we are starting to come together better."

With the loss, the women's rugby team sits at 3-4 with three more games to play.

Sophomore Carlos Rodriguez, junior Grant Loescher and seniors Mantas Silkauskas and Martynas Jurgilas also turned in a solid performance in the men's 4x100 relay with a second-place finish and a time of 39.86.

K-State will compete in its final split squad weekend of the season next weekend. The Wildcats will send athletes to the K.T. Woodman Classic in Wichita as well as the UTEP Invitational in El Paso, Texas.
